It has no fur in it. It is cloth, pure and simple, but woven by an ingenious method that produces the same On the finer undergarments laces of effect as broadtail and yet is as supple

The French discovered their mistake in producing such heavy material as they have done during the last three years, for, although they were suited to the cold of the American climate, they lacked suppleness and were therefore difficult to manipulate. They have remedied this mistake, and today they are using soft, warm fabrics that look like panne velvet and closely resemble velours de laine. Bernard remains true to that kind of zibeline which he began to use two years ago, when rough materials ousted broadcloth, but the weave is softer than it was and is, therefore, not so bulky, Bernard's Broadtail Suit.

The use of fine Persian lamb for a coat and skirt is not new, although it is not frequent because of its cost and the fact that its wearing qualities are limited. The use of cloth that imitates broadtail, however, is new. And it promises not to be ommonized because the cost is against it. A suit of such material is far beyond the average one, of course, and it may be some time before the average woman can indulge in it.

This suit, shown by Bernard, and immensely liked by the Americans, is simple, and owes its elegance to its cut. It s to be worn with a sheer white chiffon blouse, the kind that Paris has gone quite mad over, with its long sleeves and hemstitched collar or standing ruche. Little Pete Learns What His Nose Is For.

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.

(Copyright, 1913, by J. G. Lloyd.) The friendly little Night Breeze, who had warned Danny Meadow Mouse that old Granny Fox and Reddy Fox were about, danced back to the long little bush behind which sat Little Pete. He didn't know anything about Little Pete being there, and when he found him there he almost lost his breath he was so sur

"Hello!" he exclaimed. "Hello! Who are you?" Then he saw who it was, for he often had seen Little Pete at home in the old briar patch with his brother and sisters. He was more surprised than ever. "Why, why, it's Little Pete Rabbit." he cried. What are you doing so far away from the old briar patch? Does your father know where you are? Don't you know that it isn't the elast bit safe for little bunnies way out here? Where

He asked these questions so fast that each one almost tripped over the one before it, and Little Pete didn't have time to answer any of them before the little Night Breeze suddenly exploded. At least that is the way it seemed to Little Pete, for suddenly he drew in a great breath and let it all out at once as he

"I know what the matter is! You've run away! That's what you've doneyou've run away from home!" Little Pete didn't know just what to say, and then it came over him how he had been fooled into thinking a piece of paper was the white tail of his mother. "I don't care," he sobbed. "It wasn't all my fault. If it hadn't been for you I'd be safe at home in the old briar patch this very minute.' "What's that?" demanded the little Night Breeze sharply. "What's that you're saying? What did I have to do th it? Tell me that! What did I have Then Little Pete told how he had been playing "follow mammy's tail" with his mother and brother and sisters in the dear old briar patch, and how he had failed to keep watch and so had lost sight of his mother's white tail Then he told how he had seen a white spot way out in the shadowy Green Meadows, and feeling sure that it was his mother's tail, had chased after it, only to find that it was only a piece of paper with which the little Night Breeze had been playing. "Phew!" whistled the little Night Breeze, who really was a very friendly little fellow. 'It really does look as if I had got you into trouble, although I didn't have the least idea of such a thing. Now I guess I'll have to do what I can to get you out." As he spoke he came a little closer. dreadful smell filled Little Pete's nose.
